Drug Companies Fear Release of the New AloeCure

Big Pharma stands to lose billions as doctors' recommend drug-free "health cocktail" that adjusts and corrects your body's health conditions.

by David Waxman
Seattle Washington:

Drug company execs are nervous. That's because the greatest health advance in decades has hit the streets. And analysts expect it to put a huge crimp in "Big Pharma" profits.

So what's all the fuss about? It's about a new ingredient that's changing the lives of people who use it. Some call it "the greatest discovery since penicillin"!

The name of the product is the AloeCure. It's not a drug. It's something completely different. And the product is available to anyone who wants it, at a reasonable price. But demands may force future prices to rise.

TOP DOC WARNS: DIGESTION DRUGS CAN CRIPPLE YOU!

Company spokesperson, Dr. Liza Leal; a leading integrative health specialist recommends AloeCure before she decides to prescribe any digestion drug. Especially after the FDA's stern warning about long-term use of drugs classified as proton pump inhibitors like Prilosec®, Nexium®, and Prevacid®. In a nutshell, the FDA statement warned people should avoid taking these digestion drugs for longer than three 14-day treatment periods because there is an increased risk of bone fractures. Many people take them daily and for decades.

Dr. Leal should know. Many patients come to her with bone and joint complaints and she does everything she can to help them. One way for digestion sufferers to help avoid possible risk of tragic joint and bone problems caused by overuse of digestion drugs is to take the AloeCure.

Analysts expect the AloeCure to put a huge crimp in "Big Pharma" profits.

The secret to AloeCure's "health adjusting" formula is scientifically tested Acemannan, a polysaccharide extracted from Aloe Vera. But not the same aloe vera that mom used to apply to your cuts, scrapes and burns. This is a perfect strain of aloe that is organically grown under very strict conditions. AloeCure is so powerful it begins to benefit your health the instant you take it. It soothes intestinal discomfort and you can avoid the possibility of bone and health damage caused by overuse of digestion drugs. We all know how well aloe works externally on cuts, scrapes and burns. But did you know Acemannan has many of other health benefits?...

HELPS THE IMMUNE SYSTEM TO CALM INFLAMMATION

According to a leading aloe research, when correctly processed for digesting, the Aloe plant has a powerful component for regulating your immune system called Acemannan. So whether it's damage that is physical, bacterial, chemical or autoimmune; the natural plant helps the body stay healthy.

RAPID ACID AND HEARTBURN NEUTRALIZER

Aloe has proved to have an astonishing effect on users who suffer with digestion problems like bouts of acid reflux, heartburn, cramping, gas and constipation because it acts as a natural acid buffer and soothes the digestive system. But new studies prove it does a whole lot more.

SIDE-STEP HEART CONCERNS

So you've been taking proton pump inhibitors (PPI's) for years and you feel just fine. In June of 2015 a major study shows that chronic PPI use increases the risk of heart attack in general population.

UNLEASH YOUR MEMORY

Studies show that your brain needs the healthy bacteria from your gut in order function at its best. Both low and high dosages of digestion drugs are proven to destroy that healthy bacteria and get in the way of brain function. So you're left with a sluggish, slow-to-react brain without a lot of room to store information. The acemannan used in AloeCure actually makes your gut healthier, so healthy bacteria flows freely to your brain so you think better, faster and with a larger capacity for memory.

Doctors call it "The greatest health discovery in decades!"

SLEEP LIKE A BABY

A night without sleep really damages your body. And continued lost sleep can lead to all sorts of health problems. But what you may not realize is the reason why you're not sleeping. Some call it "Ghost Reflux". A low-intensity form of acid reflux discomfort that quietly keeps you awake in the background. AloeCure helps digestion so you may find yourself sleeping through the night.

CELEBRITY HAIR, SKIN & NAILS

Certain antacids may greatly reduce your body's ability to break down and absorb calcium. Aloe delivers calcium as it aids in balancing your stomach acidity. The result? Thicker, healthier looking hair...more youthful looking skin... And nails so strong they may never break again.

SAVE YOUR KIDNEY

National and local news outlets are reporting Kidney Failure linked to PPI's. Your Kidney extracts waste from blood, balance body fluids, form urine, and aid in other important functions of the body. Without it your body would be overrun by deadly toxins. Aloe helps your kidney function properly. Studies suggest, if you started taking aloe today; you'd see a big difference in the way you feel.

GUARANTEED RESULTS OR DOUBLE YOUR MONEY BACK

Due to the incredible results people are reporting, AloeCure is being sold with an equally incredible guarantee.

"We can only offer this incredible guarantee because we are 100% certain this product will work for those who use it," Says Dr. Leal.

Here's how it works: Take the pill exactly as directed. You must see and feel remarkable improvements in your digestive health, your mental health, in your physical appearance, the amount inflammation you have throughout your body - even in your ability to fall asleep at night!

Otherwise, simply return the empty bottles with a short note about how you took the pills and followed the simple instructions and the company will send you...Double your money back!

HOW TO GET ALOECURE

This is the official nationwide release of the new AloeCure pill in the United States. And so, the company is offering our readers up to 3 FREE bottles with their order.

This special give-away is available for readers of this publication only. All you have to do is call TOLL-FREE 1-800-746-6095 and provide the operator with the Free Bottle Approval Code: JC025. The company will do the rest.

Important: Due to AloeCure's recent media exposure, phone lines are often busy. If you call and do not immediately get through, please be patient and call back.

ON THE COVER:

George Ervin "Sonny" Perdue III served as Georgia's 81st governor from 2003 to 2011 and in 2017 was sworn in as the 31st secretary of agriculture. Perdue is the first Georgia native to hold this office. (Photo courtesy of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.)

FROM THE EDITOR

Former Gov. Sonny Perdue was sworn in as the 31st U.S. secretary of agriculture on April 25, 2017—a red-letter date for our state, as Perdue is the first Georgia native to hold that office. “Secretary Sonny,” as he is known on Twitter, oversees one of the nation’s largest federal departments, charged with administering farm policy and food safety programs and funding food stamps, other nutrition programs and the U.S. Forest Service.

Perdue amassed his agricultural knowledge the old-fashioned way. He grew up on a farm in Bonaire, and during his professional life as a farmer, agribusinessman and veterinarian, he has experienced the industry from every possible perspective. Turn to page 16 to learn how he’ll bring this experience to bear on his new role and about his plans to foster a culture of approachability in the USDA.

April is also noteworthy for another reason—it’s National Donate Life Month, which makes it fitting that we feature a story on LifeLink of Georgia, a nonprofit organ-recovery service that works to find donors and deliver organ donations.

See “A legacy of life” on page 28 to discover how LifeLink helps give transplant patients a second chance, thanks to the generosity of organ and tissue donors. Through this organization’s work, we are learning that death need not always have the last word.

Finally, on a more lighthearted note, we take a look at the entertainment-driven world of minor league baseball. See “Major fun in the minor (and wood-bat) leagues” on page 22 to find out how teams like the Savannah Bananas and the Macon Bacon are ramping up the fun with antics like break dancers, “Star Wars” nights and sumo wrestlers. Any way you look at it, it’s a whole new ballgame.

Enjoy!

My cast-iron skillet still going strong

I wanted to let you know how much I enjoyed the story “Diary of a cast-iron skillet.” [See Georgia Cooks, February 2018, page 38; bit.ly/gmiron.] I, too, received a cast-iron skillet (already seasoned) as a bridal gift 57 years ago. I have cooked just about anything you can think of in it over the years. Mine also sits on the top of the stove, ready to be used each day. Over time I have acquired other cast-iron cookware, but nothing beats my old skillet!

I look forward to GEORGIA Magazine and read each issue from cover to cover. Keep up your good work!

Eye Doctor Helps Tennessee Legally Blind To See

High Technology For Low Vision Patients Allows Many To Drive Again

For many patients with macular degeneration and other vision-related conditions, the loss of central visual detail also signals the end to one of the last bastions of independence: driving.

A Lebanon optometrist, Dr. John Pino, is using miniaturized telescopes that are mounted in glasses to help people who have lost vision from macular degeneration and other eye conditions.

"Some of my patients consider me the last stop for people who have vision loss," said Dr. Pino, one of only a few doctors in the world who specialize in fitting bioptic telescopes to help those who have lost vision due to macular degeneration, diabetic retinopathy, and other debilitating eye diseases.

Imagine a pair of glasses that can improve your vision enough to change your life. If you're a low vision patient, you've probably not only imagined them, but have been searching for them. Bioptic telescopes may be the breakthrough in optical technology that will give you the independence you've been looking for. Patients with vision in the 20/200 range can many times be improved to 20/50 or better.

Macular degeneration is the leading cause of blindness and vision loss in people over 50. Despite this, most adults are not familiar with the condition. As many as 25% of those over the age of 50 have some degree of macular degeneration. The macula is only one small part of the retina; however, it is the most sensitive and gives us sharp central vision. When it degenerates, macular degeneration leaves a blind spot right in the center of vision, making it difficult or impossible to recognize faces, read a book, or pass the driver's vision test.

Nine out of 10 people who have macular degeneration have the dry form. New research suggests vitamins can help. The British medical journal BMC Ophthalmology recently reported that

A scene as it might be viewed by a person with age-related macular degeneration.

56% of patients treated with a high-dose combination of vitamins experienced improved vision after six months. TOZAL Comprehensive Eye Health Formula is now available by prescription from eye doctors.

While age is the most significant risk factor for developing the disease, heredity, smoking, cardiovascular disease, and high blood pressure have also been identified as risk factors. Macular degeneration accounts for 90% of new legal blindness in the U.S. While there is currently no cure, promising research is being done on many fronts. "My job is to figure out everything and anything possible to keep a person functioning, especially driving," says Dr. Pino.

When Elaine, 57, of Kingsport, TN, came to see Dr. Pino she wanted to keep her Tennessee driver's license and was prescribed bioptic telescopic glasses to read signs and see traffic lights farther away. Dr. Pino also prescribed microscope glasses for reading newspapers and menus in restaurants.

As Elaine puts it, "My regular glasses didn't help too much – it was like looking through a fog. These new telescopic glasses not only allow me to read signs from a farther distance, but make driving much easier. I've also used them to watch television so I don't have to sit so close. I don't know why I waited to do this; I should have come sooner."

"Bioptic telescopes can cost over $2,000," said Dr. Pino, "especially if we build them with an automatic sunglass."

"The major benefit of the bioptic telescope is that the lens automatically focuses on whatever you're looking at," said Dr. Pino. "It's like a self-focusing camera, but much more precise."

Macon murals unveiled

Three recently installed murals in downtown Macon have brought color to the wall of the Macon Transit Authority transfer lane at Terminal Station. The murals were made possible by a Downtown Challenge Grant from the Community Foundation of Central Georgia.

The Macon Arts Alliance spearheaded the project, which features works by three artists: Mary Frances Burt, Isaac Ramsey and Christopher Logan.

Burt's mural, "A Celebration of Grace," features representatives of three cultures—Native American, African-American and European—surrounded by flowers. Ramsey showcases Georgia's birds of prey and the state's sports teams. Logan created silhouettes of people he met and photographed at Terminal Station.

"This project is about community engagement and connectivity," says Kathy Hoskins Nolan, marketing consultant to the Macon Arts Alliance. "The murals have created a new, vibrant space for locals and visitors to connect by sharing a public art experience."

For more information, visit maconartsalliance.org. To read more about Georgia's mural cities, see "Off the wall," March 2017, page 28; bit.ly/gamural.

Meadowcreek High School's culinary team won the 2018 Hospitality Education Foundation of Georgia's ProStart State Championships. The students will head to the national competition later this month.

Top student chefs cook, chop under extreme conditions

Basil-Parmesan arancini with tomato salad. Pan-seared chicken breast with caramelized onions and butter-milk mashed potatoes. Vanilla bean and chocolate sponge cake with fresh fruit relish. Sound like the menu at a top-rated restaurant? It may be one day, given that the chefs behind those creations are budding culinary stars.

Five students at Meadowcreek High School in Norcross prepared those dishes and wowed the judges of the Hospitality Education Foundation of Georgia's ProStart State Championships, a culinary cook-off for high schoolers. The March 2 event at the Art Institute of Atlanta drew 11 teams from around the state who had one hour to whip up their menus.

"It's a choreographed dance: They have to know what needs to be completed and what to do next," says Simone Bryan, coach of the winning team, who also was named ProStart Teacher of the Year.

In addition to preparing their three-course meals without the use of running water or electricity, students in this "Top Chef"-style competition also were required to butcher a chicken and demonstrate five precision knife cuts.

"It takes a lot of practice and support," Bryan says. "[The students have] been working hard on this since November."

Second- and third- place culinary honors went to Westover Comprehensive High School in Albany and Marietta High School in Marietta, respectively. Westover also took first place in the management competition, which required students to learn and explain business and marketing strategies.

The Meadowcreek High team of Wayne Miles, Carlos Barboza, Jorge Narvaez, Jose Martinez and Arturo Perez will represent Georgia and vie for scholarships at the national competition April 27-29 in Providence, R.I.

April is Safe Digging Month

ISTOCK.COM / IDEONE

Has the cable TV service ever gone out right as your team was about to kick that game-winning field goal? Or has the power gone out in the middle of making dinner? While these could have been storm-related outages, nearly 1,000 of these incidents each month are caused by unsafe digging practices in Georgia.

As summer approaches, more people are outside doing yardwork, and that makes April, designated Safe Digging Month, the perfect time to remind everyone how to practice safe digging habits. Even small projects, such as planting a shrub, can cause damage to underground utilities, so it is best to contact Georgia 811 to determine where and how to dig for any project.

Simply call 811 or go online to Georgia811.com before you dig and tell them where you want to dig. The affected utility companies will come out to mark your digging area. Using Georgia 811 is safe, free and easy.

Meghan Wade, president of Georgia 811, stresses that calling first “not only helps prevent utility damage but can also help to avoid serious injury, environmental damage, utility service interruptions, project delays, extensive repairs and legal problems. Contacting 811 should be the first step in any safe digging project.”

Plus, you don't want to be that neighbor.

—Katie Cowart

Thank you, linemen!

Electric utility linemen help keep the lights on whenever you flip the switch. Their expertise and knowledge are vital each day but especially critical when outages occur and power must be restored. Working with electricity is inherently dangerous, but the hazards linemen encounter are often compounded by extreme weather conditions and difficult terrain, such as remote mountain areas, rivers, streams and swamps.

For this type of extraordinary work and the important role they perform each day, electric utilities in Georgia have designated April as Linemen Appreciation Month. Take time today to thank your local co-op line crew!

The lineman specialty license plate is still available and helps show your appreciation for electric lineworkers while supporting a worthy cause. Proceeds from the sales of the plate go to the Southeastern Firefighters Burn Foundation in Augusta, which helps the families of burn patients. Visit bit.ly/gaprstgp for details.

Find it this month! Want to win a $25 gift card?

Are you a resourceful reader? One lucky reader who finds and submits the correct answers to these trivia questions will win a $25 Target gift card.

- 1) What nonprofit organization honored Coastal Electric Cooperative by including it on a T-shirt for the group's St. Patrick's Day celebrations?
- 2) What was the name of Peter Loose's dog, who had a special friendship with artist Howard Finster?
- 3) What recycled item is recommended for making mini-greenhouses over seeds to speed up sprouting?
- 4) What is the name of the antique boat shown in this month's Calendar?
- 5) Kidney recipient Ashaun Thompson is a member of the track team at what school?

How to enter:

Send an email to magazine@georgiaemc.com with the answers to all five questions by April 30, 2018. Be sure to include your name, address and phone number. (If more than one person answers all the questions correctly, we'll draw from among all correct answers to determine the $25 Target gift card winner.)

- Seeing the light: Marietta-based Cobb Electric Membership Corp. (EMC) plans to convert 60,000 streetlights to brighter, safer light-emitting diode (LED) lights in Cobb, Fulton, Bartow, Paulding and Cherokee counties. The lights will require less maintenance (they have a 10-year warranty) and also are designed to send an alert to Cobb EMC if one goes out.
- Shining example: Tucker-based Green Power EMC and its partner, Silicon Ranch Corp., received the 2017 Best of the Best Energy/Industrial Project award from Engineering-News Record for the 72-megawatt solar facility in Hazlehurst. The award was part of the organization's annual Best of the Best Projects awards. For more information, go to bit.ly/2018enrwards.
- Hot commodity: Sumter EMC in Americus recently donated $3,000 to Lee County Fire and Emergency Services for a thermal imaging camera. The heat-sensing device will help firefighters locate people through the dense smoke of a house fire or in the dark. Sumter EMC also recently donated $2,325 to the Positive Direction Youth Center, an after-school development program, which will use the money for Lego kits to introduce children to engineering and for speakers to help the children hear educational videos.
- New digs: The Randolph County University of Georgia Extension and 4-H office has moved into the building formerly occupied by LaGrange-based Diverse Power's Pataula District office. The building on Blakely Street in Cuthbert was donated to UGA Extension of Randolph County after the district office moved into a new building.
- Leader among leaders: James Wright, vice president for corporate services at GreyStone Power Corp. in Douglasville, was installed as the new chairman of the Paulding Chamber of Commerce on Jan. 20. One of his goals during his tenure is to recruit employers and jobs in fields such as health care and advanced manufacturing to Paulding County. To read a Jan. 15 Marietta Daily Journal

A doll called "Little Susie" learns the hard way about touching live electrical lines during Grady EMC's demonstration at Washington Middle School in Cairo.

February was a busy month of school visits for electric membership cooperatives (EMCs).

- On Feb. 12, Hart EMC in Hartwell demonstrated high-voltage electricity to students at Hart County High School. The next day, Hart EMC participated in the school's Career Day event.
- On Feb. 13, Millen-based Planters EMC was part of Burke County Middle School's eighth-grade Career Fair.
- On Feb. 16, Cairo-based Grady EMC visited two Cairo schools: Washington Middle School, where a doll called "Little Susie" assisted in a live-line demonstration; and Eastside

Elementary School, where two employees used an acoustic music performance to introduce the principle of cooperation and cooperatives.

- On Feb. 20, Monroe-based Walton EMC gave a safety demonstration to fourth-graders at Prince Avenue Christian School in Bogart who had just finished studying electricity and magnetism.
- Employees of Jefferson Energy Cooperative in Wrens took some time in February to read to students at Goshen Elementary School in Augusta and to talk about the electrical industry with students at Augusta Christian School during its annual Career Day.

A T-shirt tribute

The Friends of Shellman Bluff, a Townsend-based nonprofit organization that works to improve life in the Shellman Bluff and surrounding communities, had a unique way of thanking the linemen of Coastal Electric Cooperative in Midway for their efforts to restore power after last year's Hurricane Irma. A Coastal Electric truck and lineman are included in artist Lissa Shearouse's design for the organization's St. Patrick's Day T-shirt, which was sold locally in March. An annual St. Patrick's Day parade is the organization's primary fundraiser.

Southern Rivers Energy sponsors scholarships to special-needs camps

The Southern Rivers Energy Trust in Barnesville recently awarded $10,000 to Camp Twin Lakes in Rutledge to provide scholarships to campers from Southern Rivers' service area.

Camp Twin Lakes provides a full range of traditional camp activities for children with disabilities or illnesses through adaptive and accessible programming. All activities intentionally engage campers in their own diagnoses, encouraging self-sufficiency, understanding, independence, physical activity and overall health. For example, children with Type 1 diabetes learn how to check and regulate their blood sugar in a safe and supportive environment, and children with heart defects and/or transplants maintain their cardiovascular health through swimming and other activities.

In 2017, 75 percent of the children and teens attending three of Camp Twin Lakes' specialized camps—Camp Ache Away, for those with arthritis; Camp Kudzu, for those with diabetes; and Camp Braveheart, for those with heart defects and/or transplants—were from Southern Rivers Energy's service area.

The grant was funded through Operation Round Up, in which members of the cooperative round up their monthly bills to the nearest dollar, with the difference set aside to support local nonprofit organizations.

To read more about Camp Twin Lakes, see "I can't walk, but at Camp Twin Lakes, I can fly!" in the July 2017 issue of GEORGIA Magazine, online at bit.ly/ctwin717.

Grady EMC supports historic theater

Cairo-based Grady Electric Membership Corp. (EMC) is a supporter—known as a "Friend of the Zeb"—of the historic Zebulon Theater, also in Cairo. The nonprofit theater, which opened in 1936, is one of the state's only remaining single-screen theaters and has a seating capacity of 350. In exchange for its support, Grady EMC gets some advertising opportunities as well as four passes to each showing, which it offers to members through Facebook promotions or trivia questions. Adam Starr of member services at Grady EMC says that the hope is that these members will support the theater not only by buying concessions and returning to see additional movies there but also by considering becoming Friends of the Zeb themselves.

Engineers from Jackson EMC served as judges for middle and high school projects. Samantha Williamson, a senior at Buford High School, won Jackson EMC's Energy Innovation Award for her project, "Improvement in Solar Energy Efficiency by Minimizing Conversions."

- Spreading the love: The Sawnee EMC Foundation in Cumming recently awarded $18,500 to four local charities through its Operation Round Up funds. The American Legion Auxiliary Post 307 will use the funds to send 10 Forsyth County boys to the American Legion Boys State leadership experience; the ALS Association Georgia Chapter will help Sawnee EMC members battling the illness; The Place of Forsyth County will put its grant toward the Focus on Forsyth program, which assists senior citizens; and Friends of Disabled Adults and Children, Too! will use the funds to refurbish home medical equipment for those in need. The funds come from EMC members who round up each monthly bill, with the difference going toward charitable causes.

Secretary of Agriculture Sonny Perdue

First Georgian to lead the USDA

BY JACKIE KENNEDY

PRESTON KERES

With his wife, Mary, by his side, Sonny Perdue is sworn in as the 31st secretary of agriculture by U.S. Supreme Court Associate Justice Clarence Thomas on April 25, 2017, at the Supreme Court in Washington, D.C.

It's just another way he's gotten his new administration off the ground.

Perdue was sworn in April 25, 2017, as the nation's 31st U.S. secretary of agriculture. Fellow Georgian and U.S. Supreme Court Associate Justice Clarence Thomas officiated in a ceremony at the Supreme Court building in Washington, D.C. That morning, Perdue introduced his official USDA Twitter handle: @SecretarySonny.

Farmhand history

Perdue is up before the sun most mornings, arriving at his Washington, D.C., office by 6:45. That may sound early to some, but for Perdue this schedule allows more sleep than he got growing up on a dairy farm in Sonny Perdue's first year as secretary of the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) has found him in both new and familiar territories. Among the new: riding shotgun in a Blackhawk helicopter over flooded Texas cotton fields. The familiar: visiting farmers and ranchers to hear their stories and concerns.

Last summer, Perdue and his team traveled through the Midwest via RV on what they called the "Back to our Roots" tour. They talked with food producers, students and stakeholders to prepare for the USDA's input on the 2018 Farm Bill. He says the "listening tours" give him the opportunity to hear straight talk from rural people.

"They are the ones on the front lines of American agriculture, and they know best what the current issues are," Perdue says.

The former Georgia governor visited the front lines himself in September, accompanying Texas congressional leaders in a helicopter to survey agricultural damage caused by Hurricane Harvey.

Top right: Perdue spent much of last year visiting farmers and rural residents throughout the country to hear their concerns. Here he visits the Delaware State Fair in July. Middle: Perdue proves that “once a farmer, always a farmer” at the Mississippi Valley Fair in August during his “Back to our Roots” RV listening tour. Bottom: Perdue spends time with his grandchildren, from left, Rabun, Thomas and Eleanor, before being sworn in as the 31st secretary of agriculture. He and his wife, Mary, enjoy having their grandchildren visit them in the nation’s capital.

Bonaire, where he had to rise even earlier in order to milk the cows. He figures his Middle Georgia farm roots prepared him well for his new post.

In choosing him to lead the USDA, President Donald Trump said of Perdue, “From growing up on a farm to being governor of a big agriculture state, he has spent his whole life understanding and solving the challenges our farmers face, and he is going to deliver big results for all Americans who earn their living off the land.”

During Perdue’s Senate confirmation, Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-Vermont) questioned the authenticity of his farm upbringing, according to Perdue, who responded, “Sen. Leahy, I can still taste that slimy Holstein tail slapping across my mouth on a cold January morning.”

Perdue also has many positive memories of farm life.

“I also remember the benefits of going to that milk tank and getting out a dipper of fresh, cold milk,” he recalls. “I feel so blessed that I grew up with the opportunity—although I didn’t consider it opportunity at the time—to accomplish meaningful, purposeful work. By plowing a field or mowing a hayfield, you could see your progress and your accomplishment throughout the day. That made me goal-oriented and gave me a great work ethic.”

Perdue worked as a farmer, Air Force captain, veterinarian, state senator and governor prior to leading the USDA, a position he never craved but may have been created for.

“It’s amazing how God works in our lives,” he says, noting that before, when encouraged to seek national office, he’d reply, “I’ll run for that when they move the federal capital to Atlanta.”

But when tapped for the secretary of agriculture position, a job that didn’t require an election campaign, he felt uniquely qualified for it.

“I never had any inkling I’d be sitting here, but—and not wanting to sound hyperbolic—it’s been exhilarating,” Perdue says from his Washington, D.C., office.

On the job

Perdue has found that each aspect of the USDA piques his interest, including food safety, nutrition, research, education, forestry, farm programs and animal, plant and health safety.

“The USDA is vast and broad, wide and deep, and affects every American in some way and resonates internationally as well,” he says. “It’s absolutely fascinating every day.”

Of the objectives he’s set for programs under the USDA umbrella, his major goal as secretary is “simple but ambitious”: “I want the USDA to be known as the most efficient, most effective and most customer-focused agency in government by the time I leave.”

To accomplish that, he’s tackling major concerns of the farm sector, including international trade and regulations. He says his USDA will work hard to promote American agriculture’s interests to international markets.

“Over 20 cents out of every farm-income dollar depends on international trade,” he says. “We’re blessed to have enough food in this country, but to continue to enhance prosperity for our producers, we need to expand ... and continue to go around the world and sell this great production of our farmers and ranchers.”

Likewise, he says he’ll work to reduce regulations that have stifled the agricultural industry.

"We have experienced a sustained time in history where our farmers have been regulated to death," Perdue says. "To unleash the productivity we know American entrepreneurs can achieve, we have to peel back job-killing regulations so our people can do what they do best, which is to produce products and grow the economy."

Those who make their living off the land work diligently to maintain their way of life, diversifying as necessary to stay on the family farm, according to the secretary.

"Farmers are very creative and innovative when it comes to looking for ways to gain revenue on the farm," he says, pointing out the growing trend of agritourism.

Despite farmers' "do-it-yourself" mentality, some things are beyond their control, such as the availability of reliable internet service in some rural areas. Perdue recently met with stakeholders at the White House to "focus federal effort on broadband connectivity across America," he says.

'Farmers are anxious to use [broadband] connectivity to enhance precision agriculture as well as electronic commerce. All farmers need to be able to take advantage of these technologies.' —Sonny Perdue

At a farm show in the nation's heartland last summer, he witnessed the demonstration of a GPS-enhanced tractor that could plow a furrow for fertilizer in the fall and return in the spring to place seed in the exact same spots.

"It could reach down in that subsoil right where the fertilizer was...and ultimately produce a 10 to 15 percent bushel increase," Perdue says. "Farmers are anxious to use [broadband] connectivity to enhance precision agriculture as well as electronic commerce. All farmers need to be able to take advantage of these technologies."

When governor, Perdue invited Georgians to share their concerns in person; during "Saturdays With Sonny," residents could meet with the governor for 15 minutes to discuss any ideas or concerns.

"It gave everyday citizens access, and I learned of some issues I never would have learned through routine channels, and we made efforts to correct those," says Perdue, noting that last summer's RV tours and other listening sessions are designed to accomplish the same.

"It gives me [the] opportunity to hear issues I would not hear by sitting in the office all the time," Perdue says. "It's a matter of being approachable, of providing a culture of approachability American citizens need to have in their government." 🍌

Georgia agriculture commissioner applauds USDA secretary

AMY CARTER

Georgia Agriculture Commissioner Gary Black, left, and USDA Secretary Sonny Perdue ham it up in the Georgia Grown building at the Georgia National Fair last October.

Georgia Agriculture Commissioner Gary Black doesn't hesitate to call his longtime colleague, Sonny Perdue, "the most-qualified and best-prepared" of anyone who's ever served as secretary of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

"You have to add up his life experiences of growing up in agriculture, having formal training as a doctor of veterinary medicine, then agribusiness owner and grain trader, then several areas of public service all the way up to being the chief executive of the state," Black says. "I think we'll find during his term of service he'll be the rock star of the entire cabinet."

Black has known Perdue since 1991, when Perdue started serving as state senator representing Georgia's 18th Senate district and Black was a lobbyist for the Georgia Agribusiness Council. The two worked together on several pieces of legislation through the 1990s.

One of Black's proudest moments occurred during Perdue's tenure as governor.

"I worked hand in hand with him to establish his advisory agriculture committee that put National Agriculture Day on the map in Georgia," Black says. "Prior to Gov. Perdue, we did news releases and everybody yawned. When Perdue was governor, it turned into something that drew quite a bit of attention during the General Assembly."

Black heaps praise on Perdue's ability to "track down the best talent" and feels the USDA team he's put together is exceptional. He calls the new secretary "a man of integrity" who will stand firm for what he believes in.

"He's a vigilant fighter," Black concludes, "and that's what we need for the future of agriculture at this juncture in our history."

Since 2011, Habersham Electric Membership Corp. in Clarkesville has presented its annual Environmental Excellence Award to a business or organization that exemplifies vision, leadership and concern for the environment.

Susan Baker, Habersham EMC's manager of marketing and communications, created the award to celebrate the 10th anniversary of Georgia's first renewable-energy program, Green Power EMC.

"We saw it as a way to promote environmental awareness," Baker says, noting that the award is presented each April in conjunction with Earth Day.

Last year's recipient, the Rabun County Solid Waste and Recycle Department in Clayton, was honored for its work to preserve local streams by testing them before releasing sediment pond water, for managing the county's recycling program and for partnerships with schools to encourage students to recycle. ♻️

Major fun in the minor (and wood-bat) leagues

And why the fun is more vital than ever

BY LESLIE MOSES

Savannah Bananas owner Jesse Cole had a crazy idea: Swap the team's first-base coach with a break dancer and play Michael Jackson's "Thriller." "You can imagine the reaction from the crowd," says Bananas President Jared Orton. "We're literally starting to interrupt the game."

The Bananas are an entertainment business with a baseball team, leaders say. But record-breaking attendance for the Coastal Plain League, a wood-bat collegiate summer league, can be chalked up to near-nonstop entertainment. A 15-piece pep band greets fans, staff members sing while serving peanuts and boot-scooting senior citizens dance as "Banana Nanas."

"Now there are baseball purists out there who might not get all the antics," Orton says.

But times have changed, and teams' financial success depends on entertainment. Research—six years of Above: Fans pack Coolray Field in Lawrenceville, the home park of the Gwinnett Stripers (formerly Braves), for last year's July 4 game. The Gwinnett team saw a boost in fan enthusiasm after it announced a name change to differentiate it from the Atlanta Braves. study by Pennsylvania-based professors Chip D. Baumgardner and Michael J. Gallagher—shows it's critical for minor league and independent baseball teams to offer promotional activities at many games if they want to stay afloat financially.

Teams must remain competitive among a burgeoning number of entertainment options and stand out among more and more minor league clubs.

Even new-stadium appeal isn't enough long-term. Baseball teams left Savannah and Macon for new stadiums elsewhere, but a new venue's charm wanes after a few years, according to Baumgardner. Teams still need more promotional activities to draw fans—especially casual fans—back year after year.

But Peach State teams aim to satisfy both purists and fans who care little for RBIs (but want bobbleheads). And all the while, they boost their communities with outreach and economic impact.

Gwinnett Stripers (formerly Braves), Class AAA affiliate of the Atlanta Braves

Stripers General Manager North Johnson upset hardcore baseball fans on social media by saying he's successful if people leave games without knowing the score.

"If we relied just on baseball fans to come to our games, we'd have a lot of empty seats," Johnson says.

He hopes fans remember entertainment—sumo wrestling, "Star Wars" nights, fireworks, giveaways—more than how many runs the team scores.

"All sports now are very much in the entertainment business," he says.

And following a more-positive social media ripple last year, even more fans enjoyed the fun. Game attendance grew by 20 percent between July and the season's September end after the Gwinnett team announced plans to change its name. People confused the then-Gwinnett Braves with the major league Atlanta Braves on TV and radio advertising. Both share the metro Atlanta area.

But the Stripers' economic impact, even before the name change, was strong.

"You're talking millions of dollars," Johnson says.

Dozens of players move there, buying gas, groceries and such; scouts and visiting teams fill hotel rooms, buy plane and movie tickets and ride buses; 125 game-day employees find jobs; and 20 full-time staff members buy houses and pay taxes.

"The economic impact goes far beyond our county," Johnson says.

Augusta GreenJackets, Class A affiliate of the San Francisco Giants

Speaking of money, sales grew greener in Augusta after their bug got meaner.

The GreenJackets usher in the season with a fresh identity: new stadium, new colors and a grittier bug logo.

The GreenJackets' rebranding has "really been a good help for us," General Manager Brandon Greene says. Luxury suites sold out months before the season began, and the season ticket base increased—by 400 percent.

Fan intensity remains rock solid. The Diamond Club, about 80 fans strong, includes baseball purists who keep stats and attend every game to support players.

"We definitely have a nice group of those guys in Augusta," Greene says.

Fans also include people who just like singing to the music and enjoying fireworks. And should they want to wed at the home stadium, the new SRP Park—just across the river in North Augusta, S.C.—will host ceremonies in addition to postseason concerts and trade shows.

The GreenJackets mascot even visits schools, where young fans read books to earn game tickets.

"We're a part of the [Augusta's River Region] community," Greene says. "I think we have an impact in so many different ways."

Macon Bacon, Coastal Plain League

In Macon, the sizzle started long before the season.

"People love the Bacon," team President Todd Pund says.

He estimates that about 400 people attended the new team's naming reveal last September, and the nation heard the rhyming nomenclature soon after.

Macon Mayor Robert Reichert shows his team spirit. The Macon Bacon begin play this year in the Coastal Plain League. The first home game at Luther Williams Field is June 1 against the Lexington County (S.C.) Blowfish.

"We were on [ESPN's] 'SportsCenter' five hours later," says Pund, who told a local Rotary Club, "We got Middle Georgia on national news."

The Coastal Plain League team fills a gap left by teams that stayed in the Macon area for only a short time—"fly-by-night" teams, Pund calls them—and the Macon Braves, which left for Rome in 2003. A $2.5 million renovation to Luther Williams Field that began late last year adds perks such as VIP and group seating.

Besides good seats, team leaders give fans a say. Locals chose the name, the best Bacon logo for a collared shirt and ingredients for a Macon Bacon pizza.

And forget $8 hot dogs. Fans can buy $15 all-you-can-eat tickets, which includes the game.

Pund praises the entertainment mentality in "The Ultimate Toolkit," a guidebook to sports and event marketing by Jon Spoelstra and Steve DeLay. At the game's end, it's not about the score.

"It's got to be about entertainment," Pund says.

Rome Braves, Class A affiliate of the Atlanta Braves

Bobblehead giveaways aside, Class A baseball in Rome is serious.

The Atlanta Braves' star first baseman, Freddie Freeman, played in Rome, as did pitcher Julio Teheran and infielder Ozzie Albies.

"We have a rich history of players who have moved on to the highest level of the game and done very well," says Jim Jones, assistant general manager.

Athletes develop at each level in the minor league system; Rome is one step toward improvement and allows many to play their first full season of 140 games.

Rome fandom helps, and fan support often extends past players' time there. Locals still follow Brian McCann, a former Rome Brave who is now a catcher for the Houston Astros, last year's World Series champions.

The Rome Braves show players' hometowns on the high-definition video board they use for replays. That information, along with player meet-and-greets, strengthens the connection with fans.

The team returns the support. Making a difference in the community is "paramount," Jones says. Players visit schools, and an annual silent auction with hot dogs and chicken tenders benefits local charities.

Yet on-field play remains serious.

"We focus really on the players themselves and getting them to the next level," Jones says. "That's what it's all about."

Savannah Bananas, Coastal Plain League

Yet teams know there's room for both serious baseball and entertainment. After all, the fun-focused Bananas won the league championship in their first season.

"It's really satisfying as a baseball event," says Savannah's Greg Miller, a baseball purist who was won over after a game or two. He now buys season tickets.

But the former baseball coach knows he's more die-hard than others. "Look, I've sat in the stands with people who don't care about baseball," he says.

That's why a break dancer coached first base. A Bananas player told Miller it's like going to a circus and a baseball game breaks out.

Baseball is the sideshow, says Orton, the team president. "It's nonstop entertainment from the time you walk in." 🍌

Georgia co-ops participate in USDA conservation program

BY JENNA SAXON

HEATHER GREENE, MITCHELL EMC

Lucius Adkins Jr., chairman of the Mitchell EMC Board of Directors and a member of the Georgia Farm Bureau Board of Directors, left, and Tony Tucker, president/CEO of Mitchell EMC, stand next to a center-pivot irrigation system on Adkins' farm in Elmodel in Baker County.

Water and energy are two of the most critical requirements for agricultural operations in Georgia. Recently, three of Georgia's electric membership cooperatives (EMCs) committed to an innovative program to conserve these vital resources.

Last fall, Tucker-based Georgia EMC was contacted by the Flint River Soil and Water Conservation District and invited to participate in a grant program called the Regional Conservation Partnership Program (RCPP) through the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Natural Resources Conservation Service. The proposed RCPP project, led by the Flint River Soil and Water Conservation District, would develop innovative approaches to conservation, with a focus on water and energy. One of these includes a pilot program with EMCs in South Georgia that encourages the use of energy- and water-efficient irrigation on cropland. The program activities occur while implementing best management practices for irrigation and energy through the Environmental Quality Incentives Program.

Altamaha EMC in Lyons, Mitchell EMC in Camilla and Planters EMC in Millen agreed to participate, and the grant was awarded in late February. These EMCs will disseminate information about energy- and water-efficient irrigation and promote its use for the next three years.

The project focuses on South

Georgia below the Fall Line, a geographic boundary marked by a significant difference in soil type between the Coastal Plain and Piedmont regions. Most irrigation takes place south of the Fall Line, where major underground aquifers are accessible.

Several river basins and watersheds in this region will benefit from more widespread use of energy- and water-efficient irrigation. The project targets the Chattahoochee, Flint, Suwannee, Ochlockonee, Satilla, Ocmulgee, Altamaha, Ogeechee and Oconee river basins, where center-pivot irrigation systems are powered by electric motors.

The RCPP provides a unique opportunity to formalize a public-private partnership that will enhance water-use efficiency, improve energy efficiency and support renewable-energy initiatives. This nontraditional approach to conservation, with grassroots local leaders at the helm, will positively affect the natural resources, agricultural producers and rural communities of South Georgia. 🍌

Jenna Saxon is a government relations representative with Tucker-based Georgia EMC.

EMCs request broadband funds

President Trump and congressional leaders recently pledged $20 billion to infrastructure development for the next two years. America's electric cooperatives are requesting Congress dedicate a significant portion of these funds to bridge the digital divide for rural America. Georgia's EMCs are asking Congress to allocate at least $2.5 billion in each of the next two years to the Rural Utilities Service at the U.S. Department of Agriculture to fund broadband development in rural areas.

A legacy of life

Organ donation gives recipients another chance at life

BY H.M. CAULEY

Anyone watching Ashaun Thompson tear up the track during competitions wouldn't know that the 18-year-old has had to overcome more than racing hurdles to make the team. The Grayson teen's biggest obstacle was learning to live with his second donated kidney.

Heart disease almost kept Waynesboro's Sherrell Gay from meeting the grandkids who call her "Suga." But after undergoing two heart transplants and a kidney transplant, she's busy spoiling them, as a good nana should.

Thompson and Gay are just two Georgians whose life stories would be drastically different without LifeLink of Georgia, a nonprofit organ-recovery service with offices in Norcross, Augusta and Savannah that works with hospitals statewide to find donors for those in need and to deliver donated organs within hours. It also works to dispel the many misconceptions about organ donation.

"One of the most common myths is that it costs to be an organ donor," says Tracy Ide, LifeLink's senior public affairs coordinator in Augusta. "In fact, the recovery process is paid for by LifeLink; it doesn't cost the donor family anything."

Anyone renewing a driver's license in Georgia can indicate a willingness to be a donor, but many people don't think they qualify.

"They say they're too old or too young, but there is no age limit," Ide says. "Organs are evaluated on a case-by-case basis. What's most important to know is that one organ donor can help up to 75 people, and that's a huge legacy to leave."

That legacy is achieved by donors who give not just hearts, lungs, livers, kidneys, small intestines or pancreases; the donation list also includes skin, bones, cartilage, tendons and eyes. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 2017, 282 donors in Georgia contributed 898 transplanted organs. It's happening, Ide says, through LifeLink's outreach, not just in educating people about organ donation but also in getting them to commit to being donors.

"We used to focus just on telling people about donation," she says. "Now we're encouraging them to make a decision by going online and registering. Once people know the facts, they’re more willing to go forward.”

But the need for organs still outpaces the number of donors. In the U.S., more than 115,000 people are on organ-transplant waiting lists; in Georgia, the number is 5,400, and 4,800 of those are patients awaiting kidneys.

LifeLink is just that: the link between donors and recipients that helps doctors make matches and then transports donated organs to one of the state’s four transplant centers within four to six hours. It’s a mission the organization has supported since its founding 30 years ago.

“With LifeLink, there’s no competition for organs,” Ide says. “We work closely with all hospitals in the state and two counties in South Carolina to offer donation options. We look up what organs are viable, compare that to the waiting list and, if a match pops up, we send out the information immediately. Once we have the organs placed, they’re flown to transplant centers, and we coordinate the whole process.”

An important part of that process is working with donor families. Because Georgia is a first-person-consent state, an individual’s choice to be a donor cannot be vetoed by family members. Volunteers whose loved ones donated organs are often called on to support a grieving family and to share the benefits of donation.

LifeLink hosts memorial services for families of donors and connects them with the organ recipients—a connection that often results in lifelong friendships.

“Our care doesn’t stop once the donation process is over,” Ide says. “We’re here for the families, too.”

Donor names are displayed in the LifeLink offices and added to a memorial quilt, support groups are available and remembrance services honor donors’ memories. And many donor families volunteer their stories to inspire others.

‘What’s most important to know is that one organ donor can help up to 75 people, and that’s a huge legacy to leave.’

—Tracy Ide, LifeLink’s senior public affairs coordinator in Augusta

For Ide, being part of the LifeLink team fulfills a family mission. As a child, she watched her mother—that two-time heart recipient, Sherrell Gay—collapse on the kitchen floor as her body rejected her first transplanted heart. Ide’s grandmother, who died recently at 81, was an eye donor. And Gay and her husband, Tony, offer the services of their business, Augusta Aviation, to fly organs and doctors throughout the state.

“LifeLink is part of our entire family,” Gay says. “Without it, I wouldn’t be here.”  More

Thomas Puckett

COURTESY SUSAN PUCKETT

Susan Puckett's son Thomas, Statesboro

Susan Puckett is a proud parent of a young man who gave his organs so that others could live.

In August 2008, Thomas Puckett was 17, working in construction for the summer and looking forward to attending Georgia Southern University when an accident on the job left him with a traumatic brain injury. After he spent a week in a medically induced coma, doctors pronounced him brain-dead. A year before, he had indicated on his driver's license that he'd be an organ donor.

"That was a burdensome decision we didn't have to make," says Susan Puckett.

Puckett knew about LifeLink's monthly meetings for recipients and donors but found it difficult to talk about her son. But she began volunteering by working in the office and staffing booths at health fairs, and soon she found she was ready to tell her story.

"My husband met a health teacher from the local high school and volunteered me to talk there," she recalls with a laugh. "I was very scared about public speaking, and the beginning was hard. But by the end, I felt I'd been doing it my whole life, and now I go wherever anybody lets me speak—schools, civic organizations, churches, you name it."

Sharing the story of her son's gift also has helped Puckett heal.

"This is what I feel I've been called to do," she says. "I needed a purpose after Thomas died, and sharing his legacy is it."

Ashaun Thompson, Grayson

High school senior Ashaun Thompson, 18, doesn't remember his first kidney transplant. Born with the rare Eagle-Barrett syndrome, Thompson wasn't expected to live more than a year, but he beat the odds, only to suffer kidney failure at age 6. After his first transplant, he led a normal life until his body rejected the organ in 2013, when he was in eighth grade.

"That was really tough," says his mom, Renee Thompson. "He was in ICU for two weeks and had two seizures. It was touch-and-go."

After recovering, Ashaun Thompson was on dialysis while waiting about eight months for a new kidney.

"I missed a lot of middle school because I had to leave early three days a week and be on a machine for four hours at a time," he recalls. "That failure humbled me."

It also made the teen appreciate the second lease on life he was given as a result of his second transplant.

"I share my story as often as I can," he says. "I tell everybody how being a donor works. I even urge my friends to donate at blood drives because I needed [a lot of blood transfusions], and they're helping me."

Thompson also tells his story by not being held back. Last year, he was part of the track team at Gwinnett County's Archer High, and he's pestering his doctors for the green light to play football at Middle Georgia State University in Macon this fall.

"I keep doing things not for me but for the kids out there who live their lives in fear," he says. "I want to show that if I can do it, you can, too. As many times as I've been told I should not have lived [another] day, I have no time to live in fear."

Sherrell Gay, Waynesboro

That day in 1994 started with chest pains, but Sherrell Gay wasn't deterred; she had a shopping trip planned. Within an hour, she couldn't walk, but her doctor recommended medicine and rest.

A few days later, Gay was in the emergency room, where she learned that her heart was twice its normal size and functioning at 20 percent capacity. The prescription: medicine and bed rest for a year.

After venturing to the breakfast table one morning, Gay collapsed; her heart stopped on the way to the hospital.

"I woke up a week later with my own defibrillator and had three surgeries just for that," she recalls. "But I had no energy. Finally, the cardiologist said my only chance was a transplant."

Gay's wait was short. Within a few weeks, she underwent a four-hour surgery for a new heart that gave her the strength to walk a mile after just three weeks.

"It was such an amazing feeling to be able to breathe and talk at the same time," she says.

Seven years later, though, Gay was back on the heart transplant list when rejection set in. This time, the wait was 17 months, eight of which were spent in the hospital.

"Then my kidneys were failing, so they decided I needed a new kidney at the same time," she says.

In December 2012, two perfectly matched organs were found, and Gay underwent a 17-hour surgery. The recovery was equally daunting.

"I had to learn to walk again," she says. "But now I'm living life to the fullest and am so thankful for the decision those donors made."

In the five years since the transplant, Gay has seen her children finish college and has welcomed three grandchildren. And she's become a mentor to volunteers, both recipients and donor families.

"As a mentor, you share your story as the face of hope," she says. "I've got a story with all these complications, but it lets people see that transplants are successful." 🍌

Finster Fest celebrates Southern folk art, legendary founder

BY LAURA RAINES

On Memorial Day weekend, artists, musicians and folk-art lovers will gather again at Paradise Garden in Summerville for Finster Fest, a celebration of the life and legacy of Howard Finster (1916-2001). Finster would welcome all comers.

The garden with his visionary art, prophetic words and whimsical structures was his way to get his messages out to the world. "Someday, sometime, people on this planet are going to realize they need what Howard Finster's got, whether it's religion, whether it's art or whether it's building a garden," he said.

Thanks to the ongoing restoration by the Paradise Garden Foundation, the garden he built in North-west Georgia is still reaching people, and the festival that Finster started in 1991 is still attracting top-notch regional talent.

Finster was many things in his lifetime: Baptist preacher, builder, bicycle repairman, recycler, gardener and artist. He's been called a man of visions, the Andy Warhol of the South and the grandfather of Southern folk art.

"He was an empowering kind of mentor and tremendous art supporter," says Howard Pousner, vice president of the Paradise Garden Foundation and curator of the festival. "Artists are proud to come. The shadow that he still casts on the folk-art world is huge.

"People's joy in the garden is palpable. The Howard vibe is still here. I can see him looking down from heaven on the garden he created, seeing hundreds of people visiting again and smiling."

About 50 mostly self-taught folk artists from eight states are expected to show their paintings, sculpture, pottery, textiles and furniture at the fest. In the past, renowned artists Missionary Mary Proctor, Deb "Miz Thang" Garner, Jim Shores, Peter Loose, and C.M. and Grace Kelly Laster have come.

"The garden was always a mecca for artists. [Finster]

Top: Donnie Davis, an artist from Summerville, describes this oversized Coke bottle in the Paradise Garden visitors center as a tribute to Howard Finster on what would have been his 100th birthday in 2016. The bottle features 100 floating photos of Finster, and well-wishers were encouraged to put birthday greetings inside. "People still leave him a note occasionally," Davis says. Left: Howard Finster's paintings were the epitome of Southern folk art and often bore messages he wished to convey to the world.

attracted all kinds and ages of people," says Janet Byington, former president and founding member of the non-profit Paradise Garden Foundation.

Born and raised in Summerville, she recalls Finster repairing her bicycle and having a heart for helping people.

"It's remarkable that he took a plot of marshy land and turned it into something internationally known. Many consider it sacred ground," Byington says. "When you go to the garden, you walk away with the feeling that you could do that. It makes you want to go home and create something. There is so much inspiration there."

The foundation has raised $940,000 to date in gifts and grants to restore and maintain the garden, and she says visitation is up. With more than 6,000 visitors from 33 countries last year, the garden is an economic engine for cultural tourism in rural Chattooga County.

“Today, we have at least 40 artists making a living by their art in the county,” Byington says.

The foundation has cleaned up the creeks that run through the garden; shored up Rolling Chair Ramp, where artwork hangs; stabilized the mirror house; and created a visitors center with restrooms and a video about Finster. Because of its unique setting and Finster's influence, “there is no other festival quite like this,” Pousner says. It's fitting that visitors get to discover new artists while walking the paths and seeing the structures that Finster created.

'I'm an artist because of you'

Thomas E. Scanlin is a jeweler at Studio Jewelers in Dahlonega and collects 20th-century American art. He was a close friend of the Finsters, serves on the foundation's advisory board and often loans his iconic Finster pieces to museums.

“I met Howard in the mid-'80s, and we became close friends. He called me his 'guarding angel.' I was always fascinated by his interaction with people,” Scanlin says. “He affected others in amazing ways.”

Finster often told the story about how he became an artist. He was painting a bicycle at 59, when paint on his finger formed a face that said: “Paint sacred art. Paint sacred art.”

“He said God told him to paint 5,000 pieces, but he made more than 46,991 works before he died,” Scanlin says. Many pieces are in museums worldwide.

Scanlin remembers driving him down to Folk Fest in Atlanta.

“At the end it would take over an hour to get him out of the building. Artists and vendors would line both sides of the path, wanting to speak with him. Many would say, ‘Howard, I'm an artist because of you,’” Scanlin says.

Artist Donnie Davis of Summerville came to Paradise Garden for a fourth-grade field trip and listened as Finster explained his inventions.

“He was an inspiration,” says Davis, who went on to earn an art degree in 1997 from Georgia State University in Atlanta. “I started painting landscapes inspired by the garden, and I’m still doing it.”

Davis’ canvases sold out at Finster Fest a couple of years ago.

Russell Cook of Ranger came to the garden as a boy at the suggestion of his junior high school art teacher.

“Rev. Finster looked at my work and said it looked a lot like his. I was using bright, flat colors in the folk-art style,” says Cook, now an assistant professor of art at the Cartersville and Marietta campuses of Georgia Highlands College. “Talking to him was eye-opening about the possibilities of art, and the garden was magical with so many layers of content and visual stimulation.”

Cook will be showing his mixed-media art using found objects at Finster Fest again this year.

‘If you were with him, you were a friend’

Peter Loose of Hull is another returning artist.

“I was already making art and had gotten some recognition when I was going past Summerville and decided to stop. Howard was still actively working in the garden then. I ended up spending two days with him, making art,” says the nationally known artist, whose work is inspired by nature. “It was an instant friendship. That’s the way he was; if you were with him, you were a friend.”

“I had taken him this little painting of a fish. He was busy working, but he looked at it, stuck it up in the rafters of his studio and said, ‘You’re going to make a million dollars someday.’ I took that as a big thumbs-up.”

Finster’s favorite saying was “God is love,” Loose says. “I think that sums Howard up. He was a tuning fork, taking in all the world’s vibes and making his own weird connections. His thinking was so far out there.”

One of those connections was with Loose’s dog, Bongo.

“They had a special relationship,” Loose says. “At the end of [Finster’s] life, his daughter would call me and say: ‘Daddy’s not doing good. He isn’t making art. Could Bongo come down?’ It was a three-hour drive from Athens, but we went, and Howard would get up. It made me feel good.”

Loose believes that having Finster’s work hanging on his walls elevates his home. As an artist, he was especially influenced by how hard Finster worked.

“If you look at his output, the garden and all the works, it’s a miracle that one man could do that. He was a maker,” he says. “He also never let other people’s opinions take over his visions. He just kept doing it. He felt he was a conduit, giving people the messages they needed. His art was transformative.”

Loose loves the atmosphere of Finster Fest.

“I feel honored to show there. It’s so important for younger artists to be together, to share their work and make connections,” he says. “People who think folk art is over just aren’t talking to the artists practicing today.”

“Absolutely,” agrees Tina Cox, clay artist, folk-art collector and new executive director of the Paradise Garden Foundation. “The folk-art movement is vibrant, alive and well. Southern folk art is fun and whimsical. If you surround yourself with it, it’s hard to have a bad day.”

Cox learned about folk art when she was a member of the High Museum of Art in Atlanta in the 1990s and

Casting a line with Grandpa

BY ANNA MIDAS

We'd been out on Sullivan Lake in Newnan since 6 a.m. without any luck. I think the fish knew it was too hot and rightly stuck to the bottom of the lake, where our bait didn't reach. It was nearing noon, and I was ready to call it quits and relax in the cool basement.

I was rounding up the gear and started up the rocky path to the house when my grandpa got a sly look on his face and said, "Hold on; you've never used a fly rod before, have you?"

I replied, "No."

"Run up there and grab one. We're gonna try for just a bit longer."

My countenance (probably very noticeably) fell as I pictured more hours in the sun with no reward for my efforts. But I obeyed and got the fly rod.

Grandpa took me straight across the lake to one of his many "spots." If you could have anti-hope, that's what I had for this little lesson. He taught me the basics: flick of the wrist, a few moments' pause, then out of the water again. Handing the rod over to me, Grandpa had a solemn look, as if he was passing down a sacred rite that oughtn't be derided.

I cast my first few poppers a bit awkwardly but soon caught the rhythm of it. It is fun learning something new. Even now, as an adult, learning new things has a way of reminding you that there will always be some part of you that is a child who needs to learn.

Handing the rod over to me, Grandpa had a solemn look, as if he was passing down a sacred rite that oughtn't be derided.

As the sun settled at its peak, I was busy casting and recasting. "This was fun," I thought. "Not too bad." Little did I expect that, within seconds, I would see the lure submerge, to my grandfather's elation.

I remembered his admonition: "Wait a second, then strike." And soon I was reeling in my surprise sunfish. I will absolutely never—and I mean never—forget the shine of blue and silver as the little fish wriggled in my hand. We didn't have a camera to take a picture, but we didn't need one. I painted mental pictures of this precious moment. And now I deposit them here—for my family, for my grandpa.

Here's to you, Grandpa. 🍷

Easy ways to be eco-friendly in your garden

Organic gardening practices—such as harvesting rainwater and creating compost from junk mail and kitchen scraps—are more than just a passing trend. Organic gardening is healthier for wildlife and for humans, and it's not nearly as difficult as people may think.

"Today there are more resources about how to garden organically than ever before, and for the home gardener it's just a matter of doing some research and making some simple changes," says Joe Lamp'l, Georgia-based national gardening and sustainability expert and host/executive producer of public television's "Growing a Greener World." "It's vital to our planet and future generations to grow environmentally friendly gardens and landscapes."

So exactly what does sustainable, organic gardening mean?

"It's being mindful that your gardening and landscape are wildlife- and natural-resource-friendly, from Starting seeds in recycled containers is a great way to practice sustainable gardening. Paper cups, cardboard egg cartons and pizza boxes are a few of the items that can be repurposed as seed-starter containers.

Wooden shipping pallets can be easily and inexpensively repurposed as an open-bin composting system.

using water wisely to gardening without chemicals,” Lamp’l says. “Even if you take only a few steps, it will certainly help.”

Go with the flow

Water management is vital to growing green and eco-friendly landscapes.

“Statistics show that between 30 percent and 50 percent of the water consumers use goes toward outdoor activities, including car-washing and gardening,” he says. “Look for alternatives, like using rain barrels to collect rainfall for garden use or mulching to conserve moisture in the soil.”

Buy a rain gauge so you know how much water your plants get naturally. More plants become distressed or die because of overwatering than underwatering, so it’s good to know how much water your landscape is receiving.

“Then you can schedule your watering based on the rainfall,” Lamp’l says.

Water in the morning to avoid evaporation and to help your plants’ roots grow deeper. And use soaker hoses or drip irrigation to deliver the water right where it’s needed.

Choosing native plants can save water as well.

‘It’s vital to our planet and future generations to grow environmentally friendly gardens and landscapes.’ —Joe Lamp’l

“In Georgia, we have a good selection of natives that bloom, produce fruit and provide interesting foliage,” he says. “Natives are naturally adapted to our soil and climate, making them very desirable in a low-maintenance landscape, and they’re more drought-tolerant.”

Brown + green = compost

To avoid using manmade chemicals and fertilizers, start with the best soil possible.

“People have the power to create great soil simply by composting,” Lamp’l says. “Save your non-meat kitchen scraps and combine them with brown leaves, shredded paper and other ingredients, and you can have the ultimate soil, rich with nutrients with no cost to you.”

You don’t need fancy equipment or tools to start a compost heap. Select an out-of-the-way spot in your yard and begin putting the ingredients into a pile. Start with woody materials, branches or sticks that will aid in ventilation. Then alternate layers of “brown” and “green” materials, using a formula of roughly two-thirds brown and one-third green. “Green” materials include fresh grass clippings, weeds and non-meat and non-fat kitchen scraps, such as vegetable and fruit peelings, coffee grounds and used tea leaves. “Brown” additions include dried leaves, shredded cardboard or paper, and small wood chips.

“Keep it moist, and you can even add a little nitrogen-based fertilizer, such as Milorganite, to speed up the process,” he says.

If you want to contain the pile, build a three-sided wire cage or fasten three wooden shipping pallets together with coat hangers. You also can order closed composting systems online or from garden centers; your batches will be smaller than those produced using an open bin, but the results can be faster.

Once you've added compost and organic matter to your soil, it will dry out less quickly, but to decrease further the need to water, add a layer of mulch.

"Mulch can benefit your garden in several ways. It helps hold in moisture around your plants, and it's an excellent deterrent for weeds," Lamp'l says. "I encourage people to use natural mulches, such as wood chips, pine straw and pine bark. Usually a 1- to 2-inch layer works well."

Good bugs vs. bad bugs

Insects, pests and diseases can be challenging, but Lamp'l says there are many alternatives to using manmade chemicals to combat these garden issues.

"Only about 3 percent of all insects are true pests in your garden, so that means the other 97 percent are either beneficial or neutral,” he says. “Ladybugs eat aphids and other pest insects, for instance. When you use a broad-spectrum, manmade insecticide, you’re eliminating all the insects, even the good ones.”

Visit your garden in the early morning to remove insects by hand. Fill a cup with soapy water or insecticidal soap and drop them into the cup. Or you can buy floating row covers—lightweight netting—to create a barrier against insects, but this also will prevent the good insects, such as bees and butterflies, from pollinating your vegetables and flowers. Weigh the pros and cons when making your decision.

Think about recycling in your garden as another way to be “green.” Use plastic milk jugs as mini-greenhouses over seeds to speed up sprouting, or use clear plastic produce clamshells with a layer of soil in the bottom to start seeds.

“The covers create a humid environment,” he says. “Just be sure to put them in a sunny spot and be ready to transplant them when they’re a couple of inches tall. Yogurt cups make good pots for this.”

Lamp’l says that gardeners are limited only by their imaginations and their willingness to research ways to be organic in the landscape.

“Between the internet, the garden television programs, podcasts and even [websites] like Pinterest, you can easily become more green in your gardening practices,” he says. “Better and more-effective water use, soil amendments, gardening without chemicals and choosing native plants can go a long way toward reducing the impact on the environment. Just think: If everyone made a few changes in their gardening approach, what a difference it would make.”

Kids in the Georgia State Parks Junior Ranger program explore the diverse plants and animals that live in a rotten log during a nature hike at Red Top Mountain State Park in Cartersville. Getting back to nature

BY VICTORIA SCHARF DECASTRO

Many children today spend too much time indoors. Child advocate Richard Louv addressed this problem in his 2005 best-seller, “Last Child in the Woods: Saving Our Children From Nature-Deficit Disorder.”

‘Kids need time to just be kids, to explore our natural world and have fun while doing it.’

—Kim Hatcher, Georgia State Parks public affairs coordinator

The term “nature-deficit disorder,” coined by Louv, describes the effects on kids who are more plugged into electronics than the outdoors. He associates their separation from nature with obesity, Type 2 diabetes and other chronic health conditions. The solution, he suggests, is to help parents find ways to reacquaint their children and themselves with nature.

“Kids need time to just be kids, to explore our natural world and have fun while doing it,” says Kim Hatcher, Georgia State Parks public affairs coordinator. “Plus, they’re more likely to get exercise when they’re having fun. That’s why it’s so important for families to go hiking, biking, paddling or do other outdoor activities together. Georgia’s state parks make it easy to enjoy outdoor recreation on a regular basis.”

The success of Louv’s book resulted in the Children & Nature Network (C&NN), a Minneapolis-based nonprofit co-founded by Louv and several others in 2006. C&NN’s mission is to spark a worldwide movement that reconnects children, their families and communities to nature through “innovative ideas, evidence-based resources and tools, broad-based collaboration and support of grass-roots leadership.” The C&NN envisions a world in which youngsters interact with nature in their everyday lives and become stewards of our natural resources.

Hickory Grove Farm supplies Kennesaw State University

LAUREN KRESS / KENNESAW STATE UNIVERSITY

BY JANE F. GARVEY

Urban agriculture has grown markedly in recent decades, as underutilized plots of urban land are turned into community gardens. One example of reclaimed urban land is Hickory Grove Farm, which supplies Kennesaw State University (KSU) with much of its foodstuffs.

Jasper native Michael Blackwell is the farm manager. The longtime photographer grew up on a farm and “was always a ‘hobby farmer.’”

The 26-acre operation sits on an abandoned Georgia Department of Transportation site that the university has leased from the state. Twelve acres are in production with tomatoes, strawberries and blackberries, Tuscan kale, 150 chickens, and about 50 apple and pear trees, plus a few producing peaches and plums.

Three greenhouses—and another that’s under construction—constitute the core of the operation, but the garden doesn’t just feed KSU students; it also teaches them.

Every semester Blackwell instructs 35 to 40 students from all sorts of majors—mostly women, he observes—in the fundamentals of organic gardening.

“Organic practices work,” he says. “They’re better for the soil and for productivity.”

That’s right: organic. This former concrete-laden site now is an organic producer of comestibles. The program also uses the grass clippings and leaves from campus landscapers for compost, saving the university that dumping cost.

Blackwell’s team also is experimenting with developing new cultivars, such as a tomato to see if it can achieve the same yield on a shorter vine, making it ideal for small plots and greenhouses.

Experiments are going on all over Hickory Grove Farm.

Holding a doctorate in applied and environmental microbiology, Kyle Gabriel, mycologist, devotes all of his time to research. With a $60,000 U.S. Department of Agriculture grant to explore specialty crops in Georgia, Gabriel plans to grow mushrooms in a pair of temperature-, humidity- and CO₂-controlled, highly insulated 20-foot shipping containers. He’s looking at using waste streams from other industries, such as spent grains from Dry County Brewing Co. in Kennesaw, to grow mushrooms.

Gabriel is not the only researcher working at the site. Associate professor of biology Sigurdur Greipsson has been awarded a grant to experiment with using grasses to remove lead from the soil in a lead-contaminated corner of the property. And assistant professor of construction management Charner Rodgers is building a tiny house on the farm. The 1/8 acre behind her tiny house will be used to demonstrate how affordable housing and high-intensity urban agriculture can be combined.

With campuses in Kennesaw and Marietta and 35,000 students plus staff, KSU Executive Chef Brian Jones has a lot of folks to feed—5,000 to 7,000 people daily. He uses the farm's produce to do that.

The Atlanta native and alumnus of the Art Institute of Atlanta's culinary program did a three-year stint with Restaurant Eugene, a noted Atlanta fine-dining establishment.

There, he recalls, "a farmer walks in the back door and drops off a product, and we were able to tweak it and put it on the menu in an hour or two.

"[At KSU] we're doing similar techniques and ingredients. Only I'm not able to take the 5 to 7 minutes [it takes] to plate up one plate."

At KSU there can be surprises and interesting combinations of ingredients. One recent afternoon, Blackwell sent down 112 dozen eggs and 15 pounds of lettuce. "[Our] bake shop and pastry [makers] use most of the eggs," Jones notes, unruffled.

"Like at Restaurant Eugene, we allow the season and the farmer to create the menu," Jones says. "[The chef] is just responsible for steering that menu and making sure the techniques are right for this small larder of produce, depending on what season it is. In theory it's easy, but ..." He trails off, laughing.

Blackwell hopes the future will bring security for the farm and all its work for the university. With more trained staff, the farm could be more productive, he says.

But meanwhile, 112 dozen eggs and 15 pounds of lettuce will be put to good use.

Kennesaw State University's culinary program, housed in the Michael A. Leven School of Culinary Sustainability and Hospitality, uses the talents of many area chefs on its faculty. Here are recipes from a few of them that incorporate produce from the university's Hickory Grove Farm.

Chef Liason Aaron Russell likes to use the herbs produced by the farm along with its tomatoes, arugula, cucumbers and bell peppers to craft this panzanella, an Italian salad that also relies on good bread for its character. Halloumi cheese is a semi-hard, unripened, brined cheese originating in Cyprus. It's made from goat's and sheep's milk and sometimes cow's milk. Having a high melting point, it's good for grilling.

Grilled Panzanella Salad

Herb Oil

- 2 cups extra-virgin olive oil
- 1/2 cup fresh oregano leaves
- 1/2 cup fresh basil leaves
- 1/2 cup fresh parsley
- 2 sprigs fresh rosemary

Wash and dry the herbs. Heat the olive oil with the herbs over low heat (less than 200 degrees) and bring to a simmer. Turn off the heat and allow oil to cool. Strain and reserve.

Salad

- 1/2 pound Halloumi cheese, cut into 4-6 slices
- Salt and freshly ground white pepper, to taste
- 1/4 loaf sesame batard (or any firm white bread with a good crust), sliced
- 1/2 cup Herb Oil (see recipe above)
- 1/8 cup white balsamic vinegar
- 1/8 cup diced red onion
- 3/4 cup fresh basil, washed, dried, stems removed and leaves torn into rough pieces
- 1/2 cup baby arugula
- 4 ripe tomatoes, peeled, seeded, cut into 1/2-inch dice
- 1 pound cucumbers, peeled, seeded, cut into 1/2-inch dice
- 1/2 pound ripe bell peppers, stems and ribs removed, seeded, cut into 1/2-inch dice

Grill the Halloumi cheese on a flat top griddle, in a dry sauté pan or on a charbroil-style grill. Set the temperature to medium-high heat (high if using a charbroiler). Lightly rub the cheese with the herb oil, and season to taste with salt and freshly ground white pepper. Sear on all sides until browned; reserve.

Brush slices of bread with the herb oil. Sear bread on a hot grill until toasted, less than 2 minutes. Remove from heat and reserve.

To assemble the salad, cut the grilled Halloumi into 1/2-inch dice. Cut the grilled bread into 1/2-inch dice.

In a glass or ceramic bowl, combine 1/2 cup herb oil, vinegar, diced red onion and torn fresh basil leaves. Add the diced cheese, arugula, tomatoes, cucumbers and bell peppers; toss to coat. Add the grilled bread last, and toss again. Adjust the seasoning with salt and pepper. Serve immediately. Serves 4-6.

For his class in Latin American culinary immersion, which is taught in Spanish, Chef Humberto Guardiola uses mesclun, a mix of lettuces and other greens, grown at Hickory Grove Farm.

Ensalada Caribena (Caribbean Salad)

- 1/2 pound mesclun, washed, dried
- 3/4 cup mango, peeled
- 3/4 cup papaya, peeled
- 3 tablespoons passion fruit
- 1/4 cup rice vinegar
- 3/4 cup vegetable oil
- 1/2 teaspoon freshly ground white pepper
- 1 teaspoon kosher salt
- 3 tablespoons mint leaves, cut into thin slivers
- 1/4 cup plantain chips

JANE GARVEY

Hickory Grove Farm grows Tuscan kale among other vegetables in several greenhouses.

Tear the mesclun into pieces and reserve in a non-reactive (glass or ceramic) bowl. Cut the mango and papaya into medium dice and reserve.

In a blender jar, place the passion fruit and vinegar, and blend on medium speed. While the motor is running, add the oil in a slow, steady stream to emulsify. Add white pepper and kosher salt to taste.

Mix the vinaigrette with the mesclun and toss to coat leaves evenly, being careful not to overdress. Add the mint and toss to combine.

Arrange dressed mesclun on a serving plate and top with mango and papaya. Garnish with plantain chips. Serve immediately. Serves 8.

Serving a diverse student body means being on top of the vegetarian game for many of today's young people. This dish, using kale grown at Hickory Grove Farm, is one that Executive Chef Brian Jones likes to serve.

Crispy Kale and Brown Rice

- 1 bunch lacinato (dinosaur or black) kale, stems removed, thinly shredded
- 1 cup cooked brown rice
- 1 shallot, peeled, minced
- 1 stick celery, finely chopped
- 2 tablespoon whole grain mustard
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice
- 2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
- Pinch of salt and black pepper
- 3 tablespoons unsalted butter

In a small mixing bowl, combine shredded kale, brown rice, shallot, celery, mustard, lemon juice, olive oil and salt and pepper. Mix until well-combined. Note: It should have the consistency and flavor of a composed salad. Adjust seasoning, balancing the salt and acid, if needed.

Place a cast-iron skillet over high heat and add butter. Once butter is hot and foamy, add the kale/rice mixture in a single layer. Allow mixture to sear, without stirring, for several minutes or until the rice and kale mixture is slightly caramelized. Once it's caramelized, stir and allow to sear for a second time. Serve immediately. Serves 6.

Coulis are sauces made from puréed vegetables or fruits. Veggie coulis make a great, healthy embellishment to grilled meats and vegetables, and fruit-based coulis go well with poached, chilled fruit. This Roasted Red Pepper Coulis is a favorite with grilled chicken or stirred into a plate of mixed roasted or grilled vegetables. Add goat cheese or Boursin cheese to the vegetables for a bit of protein and extra flavor.

Roasted Red Pepper Coulis

- 2 large red peppers
- 1 garlic clove, peeled
- 2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
- 2 tablespoons vegetable stock or broth, or as needed
- Dash hot sauce, to taste, optional
- Freshly ground sea salt and black pepper, to taste, optional

Wash and dry red peppers. Turning them frequently, hold the peppers over a gas flame or over a charcoal fire until peppers are completely charred. If using a charcoal fire, close the grill lid but leave the dampers open; the contained heat helps loosen the skin.

When the peppers are blackened all over, place them in a zip-top plastic or paper bag to steam for about 5 minutes. Remove peppers from the bag when cool enough to handle. Peel off the skin. Note: If you are using a charcoal grill, the skin will slip more easily off the peppers. Remove ribs and seeds, and cut the peppers into pieces.

Place the peppers in a blender jar with the garlic; purée them. Add extra-virgin olive oil and the vegetable stock or broth. Purée on high until the sauce is smooth and all ingredients are incorporated. Note: If the coulis is too thick, add more vegetable stock. Remove from blender jar and add a dash of hot sauce, if desired. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Mixture will keep for a few days in a jar in the refrigerator or freeze short-term in small amounts for future use. Makes 1-1/2 cups. 🍷
